AWAY WITH ALL SUPERSTITIONS

'superstition, noun.

I. irrational belief usually founded on ignorance or fear...'

Collins English Dictionary

Nearly 400 years after the British people tamed religion, we are being told that we need more of it. More religious schools. The return of blasphemy laws. The creationist attack on Charles Darwin.

250 years after the Industrial Revolution began, we are being told that science and industry – rather than capitalism and ignorance – are the main threats to our welfare.

An unholy alliance of government and religions is trying to drag the British working class backwards – away from social progress and science, and back to the days when thinking for yourself was a crime.

The aim is to create a class that will be ignorant, fearful, subservient and respectful to its 'betters'. A class that will do as it's told.

This alliance is being aided and abetted by reactionary, anarchic and anti-progress elements within the working class who prey on ignorance and fear: the animal liberation terrorists, green fundamentalists and health fad-dists.

The Communist Party invites you to discuss the attack, and our response to it.
